12-13 MARS 1983

The course will begin with an examination of the relation between pacifism, non-violence and feminism in the twentieth century and earlier, and will lead into an exploration of the peaceful or warlike nature of humanity, the role of hierarchy/patriarchy and the development of feminist alternatives, women's role in protest movements, response to violence against women and other interconnected subjects.

Topics for discussion may include: equal rights and the role of women in the military; ecology and peace; oppression and revolution; do women have special skills to bring to negotiation?; linking peace and power; education for a peaceful world; non-violence as strategy and as a way of life.

Emphasis will be placed on feminist work towards the theory and practice of sharing power and responsibility, which will be reflected in a participatory class format and requirements, with attention being paid to the development of small group skills.
